

Family Involvement

In the Hawaiian Culture Course there were a few assignments where we had to interview people to find out what they think of the Hawaiian Culture and history. So I interviewed my parents. When doing the assignment we re-read things from the unit and it was so interesting to hear what my parent's thought. Getting my family involved opened doors for communication as well as having them know what I am learning each day that I am on the computer. Activities like these allow me to step away from the technology part of it all and sit down with my family and share with them, about our culture, about our history and hear each person's perspective.
